The School

Originally established in 1927 as a school of economics, Tilburg has since diversified its curriculum to include several main faculties, as well as special research programs and institutes. Tilburg University (Universiteit van Tilburg) is a private university of Catholic affiliation. A large number of research institutions are directly allied to Tilburg including the Center for Economic Research (CentER), one of the top research institutes for fundamental economic research in the Schoordijk Institute, both a graduate school and a research institute for Jurisprudence and Comparative Law; and the major part of social-scientific research is done under the aegis of the Research Institute Faculty of Social and Behavioral Sciences. Total enrollment at the school is 11,000.

The City

With a population of nearly 200,000 inhabitants, Tilburg is the sixth largest city in the Netherlands. Tilburg is a hard working, industrious, and scholarly city, with an array of educational institutions few other towns can match. Tilburg is rightly proud of its reputation as a centre of learning. A student population of over 25,000 makes Tilburg one of the Netherlands' principal educational centres.

However, there is more to Tilburg than work and study. The city has a great deal to offer tourists, too. As well as a rich cultural life, Tilburg provides plenty of opportunity to take part in entertainment and leisure activities. It is situated in the beautiful Brabant countryside, one of the most attractive areas in the Benelux region, with many popular theme parks such as the 'Efteling', 'Beekse Bergen' and the 'Land van Ooit'.

In the heart of the city, on a site known simply as 'de Heuvel', stands a statue of King William II. From 1831 tot 1849, William held court at Tilburg, and the city has several striking buildings that recall this period. On 'Willemsplein', the square named after the monarch, is the palace William built in the English Romantic style. The King also had a monumental barracks house built, called the 'Lancierskazerne' (the Lancers' Barracks), which is the oldest preserved cavalry barracks in the Netherlands.
